Chapter 133: The Rise of the Cruiser and Destroyer Fleet

The relentless innovation of the Divine Triad's forces did not stop with the creation of the divine warships and their accompanying frigates. Recognizing the need for greater versatility and specialized firepower, the warship crews, under the guidance of the Apostles of God, Dark Apostles, Shadow Lords, and Fiery Dragon Lords, embarked on their next grand project: the forging of 500,000 Cruiser-Class and Destroyer-Class spaceships.

Forging the Fleet

The forging of these vessels was no ordinary feat. It combined the craftsmanship of the Shadow Lords, the precision of the Apostles of God, and the unyielding resilience of the Fiery Dragon Lords. Utilizing materials derived from the fruits of the second World Tree and metals imbued with the essence of the Absolute Crown, the construction process was both meticulous and monumental.

These ships were designed to complement the massive warships and frigates, filling vital roles in the Divine Triad's armada.

Cruiser-Class Spaceships

Purpose: Cruisers were designed as multi-role vessels, capable of excelling in both offensive and defensive operations.

Features:

Heavy Armament: Equipped with mid-range energy cannons, guided divine missiles, and specialized weapons that could disrupt magical barriers and disable enemy ships.

Speed and Agility: Faster and more maneuverable than warships, cruisers were adept at flanking maneuvers and quick strikes.

Tactical Hubs: Each cruiser served as a tactical hub, coordinating smaller vessels like space-frigates during engagements.

Crew: Manned by elite squads of Heavenly Soldiers and Dark Apostles, cruisers operated as the backbone of the fleet, balancing power and speed.

Destroyer-Class Spaceships

Purpose: Destroyers were built with one goal in mind—absolute annihilation. These ships were the fleet's heavy hitters, capable of overwhelming enemy defenses and obliterating entire battle groups.

Features:

Massive Firepower: Destroyers were armed with long-range energy lances capable of firing beams that tore through entire fleets.

Planetary Bombardment: Equipped with payloads designed for realm-wide destruction, they could unleash devastation upon entire planets or realms with a single barrage.

Reinforced Armor: Their hulls were layered with celestial metals and protected by advanced energy shields, making them nearly indestructible.

Crew: Destroyers were commanded by Shadow Lords and Fiery Dragon Lords, whose raw power and tactical brilliance made them the perfect leaders for such devastating vessels.

The Role of the New Fleet

Fleet Composition:
The addition of 500,000 cruisers and destroyers transformed the Divine Triad's armada into an unstoppable force. These new ships bridged the gap between the agility of frigates and the overwhelming might of the divine warships, creating a balanced and versatile fleet capable of adapting to any challenge.

Combat Versatility:

Cruisers excelled in patrols, skirmishes, and support roles, ensuring that no enemy could outmaneuver the fleet.

Destroyers acted as the hammer of the fleet, smashing through enemy defenses and paving the way for larger ships to deliver the final blow.

Unified Command:
The coordination between cruisers, destroyers, warships, and frigates was seamless, thanks to the leadership of emissaries and generals stationed aboard the divine vessels. The fleet's hierarchy was meticulously structured, ensuring that every ship played its part in the grand design.

The Growing Might of the Divine Armada

With the addition of 500,000 Cruiser-Class and Destroyer-Class spaceships, the Divine Triad's armada had become a force beyond comprehension. It was a fleet capable of protecting the multiverse from any threat, whether internal or external. Each ship was a testament to the unity and ingenuity of the Divine Triad and their followers, standing as a symbol of their unwavering resolve.

The sight of this expanded fleet, shimmering with divine light and shadow as it moved through the vastness of space, was a reminder to all that the balance of the multiverse was in safe hands. No power could oppose such might, and no realm could escape the reach of the Divine Triad's will.
